THE ENGLISH CORN MARKET .- A correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, writing from London under date of Sept. 21st, says :

The price of Indian corn this morning, in Mark Lane, is 44 to 45 shillings per quarter of eight bushels, each bushel weighing 56 pounds of seed, cleaned from cob and husk, and from all impurities. But, as it is stated, that all the steamers which have left for the States, during the last six weeks, have taken out large orders for the purchase of this article, it is futile to suppose that the above heavy price will be of long duration. I have, however, made many inquiries among the dealers in the London corn market; and I have come to the conclusion that our farmers in Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Ohio, (which are the five largest grower.) may safely reckon on a stendy demand for Indian cora, in the London market of 30 shillings the quarter on an average, equal to nearly $1 per bushel. My calculation is made on the supposition that, during a bad harvest in this country, the corn will be in full demand for human food, and in a good harvest, when money is plentiful, then there will be an increased demand for laborers and a proportionably increased demand for meat to feed them with, At the middle of May, Capt.
